A Tragic Disappearance.

Let be other fields for the exercise of her fruitful brain. The world had always seemed so large to her-so full of resources.

At ten o'clock she heard some one soming up the stairs. She weighed the tread, wondering if it was a policeman's. No, it was too light for that. It was a woman's. Opening the door, she www Mrs. Nolan standing before her in the ill-lighted corridor. She drew her an, her fears completely dominating her speech.

"I know you are angry, but I could mot help it?" began Mrs. Nolan in a harsh undertone. "What was it?" demanded Mrs. Goddard; "don't keep me waiting." "It was a lot of things. I did my best, but the custom officers would not let me have your trunks."

"Is that all?" "No, they held me there for several hours asking all manner of questions about you and making me swear to etatements. I swore enough lies to draw a pension from the kingdom of Hell for the rest of my life. It was all shout the ownership of the contents of the trunks and which were your shings and which mine."

"Then they did not suspect us of-?" "No, it was only about the things, Then after I had managed to get possession of my trunks, by showing my mame on them, I slipped away and got a cab that took me to the Portland house. I thought I would be free, but the police officers kept calling to make other inquiries and get me to make other affidavits about the color of your hair, your age, your residence, the name of your husband, and what not. Then they had no sooner given me a breathing spell than the reportars and foreign correspondents began to troop in."

"Reporters?" Mrs. Goddard promodificed the word as if she were Searning to speak English.

"Y.s, you don't mean to say you haven't seen the afternoon papers!" Mrs. Nolan drew three damp ones from her cloak pocket. "I can't imagine what you have been doing all day. They have been yelling your mame all over Liverpool."

"I thought it would get into print, of course," said Mrs. Goddard. She had calmed down considerably and mow set herself to the task before her. "Of course, I can't go without clothes," she murmured, reflectively, and let those stupid limbs of the law ship every rag I have back to the lajor. It would upset him awfully!

Now, let me think." The product of her meditation was worthy of her ingenuity. She laid aside the newspapers, of which she had only read a few big headlines, and sat down at a table where there was a pen, paper and ink, and began to write as follows: "Whereas, I, Jeanne Goddard, wife of Major Rowland Goddard, of Lyndhurst-on-the-Hudson, New York, do hereby acknowledge that I owe my companion, Lucy Nolan, for past serv-Ices, the sum of one thousand dollars, which debt I do secure by a mortgage on all my personal effects, such as my jewelry, trunks and all their various contents, such as wearing apparel, setc. In case of my death while we are abroad I hereby authorize her, the said Lucy Nolan, to retain the Corementioned property till my hus-band, the said Major Goddard, has satisfied her claim in full. To this I herewith set my hand and seal.

"Jeanne Goddard." "What does all this mean?" ques-Gloned Mrs. Nolan, when she had read it twice, each time with contracted brows and a doubtful shake of the

"You must go and inquire the address of the most reliable lawyer in Liverpool. Pay him nis fee in advance, give him this paper and tell him that you want him to get my luggage turned over to you. You must explain that I have always been-that I always was a hard individual to get money out of, and that as I already owed you a thousand dollars you refused to go abroad with me without some sort of security. Tell him that you intend to take the things right back to America, believing that Major Goddard will settle your claims as soon as you do. Are you willing to do this?"

"Oh, I don't mind at all," said Mrs. Nolan, smiling. "I have just begun to get my hand in and rather like the excitement. The English are so polite. I think I can tell a tale straight enough."

The two plotters did not meet till the following afternoon. About four o'clock Mrs. Nolan entered, her face radiant with good news.

"I had very little trouble," she announced. "I secured the services of the best barrister in Liverpool. He charged $50; but he said he would stand as my security in case of any legal complication. I tell you I felt good when I saw the trunks unloaded

"Then we shall go on to London to-night," exclaimed Mrs. Goddard. "The train leaves at eight o'clock. Meet me at the station. When we get to London we shall rent a furnished villa in the suburbs somewhere and be dead to the world for awhile at least. We'll have a lot of fun, Lucy."

Snow in the City of Mexico. Mexico City, Feb. 18.—Early yester-day morning snow fell in this city and in the valley of Mexico. The ground being covered with snow in the higher suburbs, where trees and tropical plants were beautiful with a white mantle, greatly aroused the curiosity of the people and created much excitement. Snow had not fallen in this city before for nearly half a century. In this city, however, it melted as fast as it fell.

New Orleans, Feb. 18 .- A negro named Jackson was lynched yesterday at St. Peter, a station on the Texas and Pacific road, about 20 miles above the city. Jackson visited the home of Alexander Bourgeois, engineer of the drainage machinery on Belle Point plantation, and told Bourgeois the manager wanted him. The engineer mounted a tricycle with him, and at a little way further on Jackson stab-bed the engineer in the back and then threw the body into a ditch. He then returned to the house and butchered Mrs. Bourgelos and her two bables and ransacked the house. Two boys were visiting the family, and when they caught the first glimpse of the attack on Mrs. Bourgeois they hid in the woods. After the negro's departure they gave the alarm. The negro was captured, fully identified, and lynched before the sheriff arrived. Parkersburg, W. Va., Feb. 17.—The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ray, of Kentuck, Jackson county, 6 years of age, proved himself a hero Friday af-ternoon by giving up his own life in a vain attempt to save that of his baby sister after he had heroically rescued sister after he had heroically rescued two other sisters, aged 2 and 4, re-spectively, from their burning home. The four children had been left alone in the house, the father being out of town and the mother having gone to a neighbor's. The house caught fire a neighbor's. The house caught fire during their absence and before the children realized it the whole room was a mass of fiames. The two little girls were too badly frightened to escape, and the little fellow led them out of reach of danger and then went back to where his sister. A months old was to where his sister, 4 months old, was asleep. But the flames had gained such headway that he was overcome before he could get out of the house with his precious burden, and both he and the infant were burned to death.
